Halloween Fun....The Seattle Georgetown Morgue Ranked As The 10th Scariest Haunted House In The U.S.

Don't visit Seattle's Georgetown Morgue unless you're ready for a serious scare.

Seattle's Georgetown morgue is the scariest experience you'll ever have!

Looking for a truly frightening Halloween thrill this October? If you live in Seattle, you don't have to go far. According to the expert thrill-seekers at Hauntworld, one of the country's scariest haunted houses is right here in our city! The infamous Seattle Georgetown Morgue ranked at number 10 in their 2024 list of the top 13 scariest haunted houses in the U.S.

What is the history of Georgetown Morgue?

Ranked at number 11 on the list, Georgetown Morgue is located (as you may have guessed) in Seattle's Georgetown neighborhood. It has reportedly been there since 1928, and in that time the morgue managed to accumulate quite a laundry list of morbid events. The main legend is the most shocking one.

As the story goes, Charles and Henry Broughton purchased the morgue in 1939 and named it Broughton Brothers Funeral Services. Several years later, after an earthquake killed Charles, a gruesome event took the life of Henry as well as that of several of his employees. Allegedly, the morgue was broken into on October 25, 1968 by several men. All nine of the morgue employees, including Henry, were forced into a crematory and burned alive.

No record of this incident exists, but the story concludes with the City of Seattle acquiring the morgue the following year because there were no employees left. Whether it's one of Seattle's most disturbing unsolved crimes or simply an enduring ghost story, the fact remains that the Georgetown Morgue is considered one of the scariest places not just in Seattle but in the whole country.

Keep Your Dogs and Cats Safe From Holiday Hazards

Happy holidays? Not if your pet gets sick. The Food and Drug Administration's Center for Veterinary Medicine discusses some unhealthy holiday temptations and how to keep your pets safe.

Stocking Stuffers and Pet Treats

If your dog received a stocking full of pet treats, make sure he doesn't gobble them all up at once, making them hard to digest. Unchewed pet treats can get stuck in the trachea (windpipe) or gastrointestinal tract (esophagus, stomach, and intestines).

If your dog is in obvious distress from eating too much too fast, call your veterinarian immediately. Some telltale signs are drooling, choking, or vomiting.

Take note of timing. If a bone or chew toy lodges in your dog's stomach or intestines, the symptoms might not be immediate. Hours to days later, he may vomit and have diarrhea, be less active, not want to eat, and have stomach pain. If the blockage stays there too long, your dog may become very ill.

When in doubt, call your veterinarian, who may need to take x-rays, use an endoscope (a medical device with a special camera that can see inside the throat, stomach, and intestines), or even do abdominal surgery to see what and where the problem is and remove any pieces of bone or chew toy that are causing the blockage.

Tinsel and Ribbons

Decorating your tree? Wrapping or unwrapping gifts? Keep a close eye on where you leave leftover tinsel, string, and ribbons.

Your cat or dog may find these decorations irresistible because they look like easy-to-catch, sparkly, and wiggly prey. In fact, they can cause serious stomach and intestinal damage.

Play it safe by keeping tinsel off the tree and collecting all ribbons and string after gifts are opened.

Holiday Plants

If you have holiday plants such as poinsettias, mistletoe, or holly around, take care. When you display (or dispose of) these plants, your cat or dog may decide they're good to eat.

Take poinsettias, which can irritate your pet's mouth and stomach and may cause drooling, vomiting, and diarrhea. If your pet eats poinsettia leaves, you can help by picking up the food and water dishes for a couple of hours to let your pet's stomach settle.

Fortunately, severe mistletoe toxicity is uncommon and usually occurs only if your pet eats a large amount. Symptoms include vomiting and diarrhea, difficulty breathing, slowed heart rate, low blood pressure, and odd behavior.

Even though holly berries and leaves aren't very harmful, they can still make your pet ill and you should prevent your pets from eating them. In both dogs and cats, the plant's toxins can cause drooling, vomiting, diarrhea, loss of appetite, and decreased activity. Not to mention, the spikey leaves could hurt your pet's mouth.
